'The Apothecary's Daughter'
by Charlotte Betts

It is 1664 and Susannah Leyton has grown up in her father's old apothecary shop in bustling Fleet Street, rich with the aroma of rosemary, lavender, liquorice and turpentine. A skilled student of the apothecary's craft, she even impresses handsome, austere Doctor William Ambrose with her medical knowledge. But everything changes for Susannah when her father remarries and she is caught in a battle of wills with her step-mother. Life above the shop becomes unbearable and she is desperate to escape.

All welcome to read. Those who prefer not to read are welcome to just come along and sit and listen.

Entrance is £2.50 and includes refreshments. Further details on 0113 2690356.
